

2012 CENSUS OF GOVERNMENTS

A Comprehensive Look at the Economic Activities of America's Governments

The 2012 Census of Governments is here. All of us have a strong interest in the successful completion of the 2012 Census as it will identify the scope and nature of the nation's state and local government sector.

The Census of Governments will identify, measure, and provide insight into state and local government activity and serve as the foundation for developing national economic and public policy.

This information will be used by a variety of entities such as the U.S. Congress, state and local governments, federal agencies, and the general public when measuring government activity. Students from elementary school through college will use this information to gain an understanding of state and local governments.

The enclosed questionnaire is the Survey of Public Pensions. The Survey of Public Pensions is part of the 2012 Census of Governments and will provide measures on revenue, expenditures, investments, and membership for all of the state and local government employee retirement systems in the United States.

You can contribute to a successful 2012 Census of Governments by ensuring that the questionnaire receives prompt attention and is completed and returned as soon as possible. Please accept our appreciation in advance for ensuring the success of the 2012 Census of Governments.

"Every city has a strong interest in the successful completion of the 2012 Census of Governments, as it will identify the scope and nature of the nation's local government sector. It identifies, measures and provides insight into state and local government activity and serves as the foundation for developing national economic and public policy."

Don Borut,

"The public service provided by the Census of Governments programs to produce data that allow users to understand the performance of the state and local sector is, in my mind, almost immeasurable."

Dr. Robert Inman,
The Wharton School
University of Pennsylvania

"The Census of Governments is the only comprehensive source of data on local governments that is crucial not only to developing profiles of local governments for comparative purposes but also to providing data that can be merged with other sources of local government data. By collecting uniform, comprehensive organizational, employment, and financial data, the Census of Governments provides the breadth of a complete census, which cannot be achieved through individual efforts outside of this federal agency."

Director, Survey Research
